GUIDE STEP #1

Set a timer

That's right. Determine the amount of time you are going to dedicate to researching and making a decision on summer camp for your children. It's easy to spend hours upon hours obsessing over every detail, but the truth is, this won't make anyone's summer experience much better. Set some time aside to research potential camps and to walk through the steps outlined here. And then, trust yourself to make a decision and stick to it. No summer camp solution will be completely perfect. Accept that there will be good and bad in any decision you make.

Identify Your Goals

Ask yourself two questions. First, in an ideal world, how do you want your summer to feel? What is the right amount of downtime and the right amount of structure for your family? Do your best to anticipate how much structure and free time your family needs to function best.

Next, ask yourself (and your kids) what they want to get out of this summer. Do you want the traditional day camp experience, or is there a specific activity your child loves, or a skill you'd like them to learn, that you want to give them an opportunity to practice?

GUIDE STEP #6

Write It Down

You'll probably forget what you signed up for by the time the summer rolls around, so write it down now. Print off a summer calendar, and color code each child's schedule.

You can put this up on the refrigerator to keep everything straight during the summer.

Don't forget to make a note of paperwork due dates and block time on your calendar to complete it.
